

Speedway Opened To Motor Traffic In Colorful Review

Parade of 2,000 Children and Historic Pageant Feature Program as Murray
Hulbert Severs Barrier

The Speedway, designed originally for exclusive use of horse-drawn vehicles, was declared open to motor vehicle traffic yesterday when President Murray Hulbert of the Board of Aldermen, acting for Mayor Hyland, severed a rope stretched across its northern extremity and began a program of exercises planned to signalize the event.

The Speedway runs from 155th Street to Dyckman Street and skirts the Harlem River for great part of its length. The exercises attendant on its opening to motor vehicles were witnessed by about 5,000 residents of Washington Heights and the Bronx. They were held at a point opposite 175th Street on the Speedway. A feature of the occasion was a parade of 2,000 children from thirteen city schools. They wore costumes in which the national colors were blended. The automobile parade was made up of 200 cars, also decorated.

Colorful displays in some of the leading cars represented Christopher Columbus, George Washington, Abraham Lincoln and famous Indians of the North American tribes. The Women's Police Reserves, wounded veterans from various hospitals and a gathering of "New York's most talented children" selected from numerous schools were conveyed in busses over the parade route.

Magistrates George W. Simpson, chairman of the celebration, presided from a reviewing stand erected at 175th Street. The principal address was delivered by President Hulbert, who reviewed the history of the Speedway and the fight he said had been waged by the Hyland administration to secure the law permitting use of the thoroughfare for automobile credit. For the success of this effort was given Magistrate Simpson, the late Assemblyman William T. Amos and Earl A. Smith and James Pringle, of the Harlem Board of Trade.

Chief Magistrate McAdoo, the last speaker, urged those present to use the thoroughfare as one means of decreasing traffic congestion, thus showing his satisfaction that the city's money had been well spent.

The opening of the speedway was further celebrated last night at a dinner at the Hotel Biltmore. Speeches were made by Magistrate George W. Simpson, John J. Ryan, Acting Commissioner of Parks; Senator Ward V. Tolsey, Murray Hulbert, President of the Board of Aldermen, and Edward R. Cohen, a member of the finance committee of the Speedway Association.

Railroad Congestion Limiting Commerce

Shortage of railroad transportation is so great and serious that it is not only likely to last for long time to come but to limit production and commerce of all kinds. Samuel G. Dunn, editor of "The Railway Age," asserted at the annual convention of Associated Business Papers in New York yesterday. Almost every other condition is favorable to an increase of production and commerce and a revival of prosperity, he declared.

The present transportation situation is aggravated but not created, by the coal and railway shippers' strike," Mr. Dunn said. "The condition is due mainly," he added, "to a great industrial revival and commercial activity and to a long decline in the expansion of railroads."
